Waste Of Effort On Farm Seen By Visitor

Study Of Co-operation Is Urged On Farmers By Speakers

FINISH SHORT COURSE

"You can become just as efficient a farmer as you like, you can grow as fine grain as you like, you can raise as good pigs as you like, but if there is not a satisfactory method of selling your products your scientific farming is of little advantage." Headmaster Joseph McCulley of Pickering College, declared at the Newmarket short course banquet at the college on Thursday evening.

"One serious word," said Mr. McCulley. "It is that for many years we have been content to plow our lonely furrow with too little regard for the fellow plowing across the way. If you want to occupy the place you have the right to occupy it is only as you learn to work together."

"Some of us have been very, very interested in the experiments in co-operation going on in Denmark and Sweden. I hope that you learn before it is too

BOWLERS PLAN TWO BIG EVENTS FOR 1937
Newmarket Lawn Bowling club has accepted an invitation from the Ontario association to entertain a team of South African bowlers who will visit Canada in June. There are 45 in the party, including 15 women.

The club at a recent executive meeting with President Larry Bell presiding decided to sponsor a July 1 tournament for 48 rinks. This would be an all-day tournament, and would be one of the biggest events of the bowling year.

TANNERS LOSE CHAMPIONSHIP TO OAK RIDGES

Oak Ridges Take Commercial Title In Red-Hot Game Here

TANNERS MISS CHANCES

Oak Ridges won the championship of the mercantile league here last night, when they defeated the Davis Leather team 5-3. This was a very hard-fought game and ten minutes of overtime had to be played before a winner was declared.

In the opening period, Helmkey and Boyle scored for Oak Ridges and Ross Smart notched a counter for the Davis tanners, making the score 2-1 for Oak Ridges at the end of the first period.

In the middle period, Miller scored for Oak Ridges, making the score 3-1 for the Junction boys, and from then on till the end of the period, the tanners put on the pressure and, on goals by Howard Brown and Bob McCabe, tied up the count.

In the final period neither team could get a marker, although the Davis boys had some very good chances to go into the lead but could not seem to make their plays click, the score being 3-3 at the end of regulation time.

In the overtime, Miller notched two goals and put the game and championship on ice for the Oak Ridges club. Final score was Oak Ridges 5, Davis Leather 3.

For the visitors, Miller, Sayers and Helmkey looked the best, while for the local leather company, Bob McCabe, Ross Smart, B. Groves looked the most impressive. Every man on the club turned in a good game and kept trying till the final gong.

The teams—Oak Ridges: goal, Hulme; defence, G. Boyle, J. Helmkey; centre, Miller; wings, Sayers and Burgess; alternates, H. Boyle, Shropshire.

Davis Leather: goal, M. Smith; defence, R. Smart, H. Thoms; centre, B. Groves; wings, Bob McCabe, C. Turan; alternates, H. Brown, A. Cullen, P. Townsley, W. Townsley.

E. N. PENROSE LAID TO REST

Dies Suddenly On Thursday, 75 Years Old, Of Pioneer Family

Funeral services for Ezra Noble Penrose were held on Sunday afternoon. Mr Penrose was extremely well-known in Newmarket and a great number of citizens paid tribute to his memory at the service at his home on Second St.

A wealth of floral tributes also indicated the high regard in which he was held.

Pallbearers were his grandsons, Walter and Bob Davis, Fred and Roy Penrose, Harry Penrose, all of Newmarket, and Harry Henderson, Toronto.

Rev. Dr. W. S. Alexander, conducted services at the home and at Newmarket cemetery. Mrs. Leonard Little sang a solo at the home.

Mr. Penrose died at 6.45 p.m. on Thursday, of heart failure, following a stroke at noon. He had been in his usual health earlier in the day.

Of pioneer stock, he was in his 73rd year. Born in Whitechurch, close to Pine Orchard, he went to school at Pine Orchard. He was the son of Ellen Broughton and George Penrose.

He farmed at Sharon and for 32 years on the farm on Second St. now occupied by his oldest son, Albert. He retired 14 years ago.

He was married 53 years ago, March 18, to Frances Stephens at the Stephens homestead on Second St.

One son, Henry Wesley, was killed in France on March 25, 1918. One daughter, Alberta, Mrs. I. E. Davis, died two years ago. Mrs. Penrose and six children survive: Albert, Newmarket; Nella, Mrs. C. W. ### Ever Tried To Talk With A Kind Of Silly Young Girl?

Newmarket High School Students Publish Year-End Review

Instead of an elaborate high school magazine, containing advertising, Newmarket high school this year publishes a typewritten volume packed with fun, literature, and the "low-down" on the graduating class. The publication is very creditable to the school.

"A Confession" is the title of one contribution by "First Former."

"My pet aversion," he writes, "is one that is not common among boys, especially those about 15 or over. It is trying to carry on a conversation with a girl of the same age."

"Have you ever tried to carry on a conversation with a young girl who is kind of silly? When I am walking any place, I'll turn a corner and find myself meeting a girl I know. I'm practically forced to talk with her. I begin to get excited and my face begins to burn, when I find I have to talk with her. She will start to talk about something, which, as a girl, she considers funny. I don't see the joke, but I try to laugh."

"Finally, I'll get enough nerve to talk about something that interests me. It might require some explaining. As I come to the interesting part of the sub-

Province Takes Over Last Link With No. 12 Highway

May Indicate Eventual Taking Over Of Newmarket-Sutton Highway

Newmarket is now on what is likely to be a popular route to Muskoka, namely via Sutton, Beaverton and Orillia.

The provincial government last week took over the only unpaved link in this route to the northern playground, namely, the six and a half miles from Port Bolster to the No. 12 highway about two miles from Beaverton. The Era is informed by Reeve Wilmot Bain of Scott township, chairman of the Ontario county road commission.

The stretch of highway taken over lies in Brock and Thorah townships in Ontario county. This action on the part of the government makes the eventual taking over of the Newmarket-Sutton highway a probability.

POSTPONE MEETING

The Cherokee club meeting at the home of Mrs. R. C. Smith, Poplar St., has been postponed. The next regular meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. G. C. Young, Prospect St., Friday evening, April 9, at 8 p.m.

CLUBS TIED IN BATTLE ROYAL T. H. L. PLAY

In Three Out Of Five Series, Play At Aurora Tomorrow Night

PLAYED IN TORONTO

Aurora and Bradford are tied in the King Clancy T. H. L. series, with a win each, and a tie. It is a three out of five series, with the next game in Aurora Friday night.

Aurora took the first game 3-1 at Varsity arena last Friday night. This was a fast display of hockey with Groves in the Aurora net and Bob Peters in the Bradford net both excelling.

Hunt scored for Bradford and then Townsley for Aurora in the first period. In the second period Bradford put Aurora one up, scoring on a rebound. Young Mair made it two up in the third.

Monday night's game at Aurora was a disappointment to both teams, ending in a 3-3 tie. In the first period Randall scored for Bradford and McComb of Newmarket for Aurora. In the second Ogilvie scored for Bradford and James for Aurora. The third was scoreless, and in a ten-minute overtime McEwan scored for Bradford and McGee for Aurora.

Bradford won at Bradford last night with a 6-5 score. At no time was there a lead of more than one goal in this see-saw battle. Mair got the only penalty of the evening, and his first hockey penalty.

Scores were: first period, Randall from Hunt, for Bradford; Rose from James for Aurora; second, McEwan scored twice for Bradford on rebounds; Roberts from Townsley for Aurora; Townsley from McComb for Aurora; third, Ogilvie from Lang for Bradford; McComb from Townsley for Aurora; Hunt from Randall for Bradford; Bernard from Townsley for Aurora; McEwan from Hunt for Bradford.

Joe Tunney was good in goal for Aurora, and Butch Swain did a good job for Bradford. Both goalies were subjected to heavy fire.

POLLOCK'S SHOE STORE MANAGER PROMOTED

Cameron Freeland, manager of the local branch of Pollock's Shoe Stores, has been promoted to be supervisor of the entire chain, with headquarters in Toronto, and Wilford Curran, of Toronto, has been appointed local manager.

BELL COMPANY ADDS COMMERCIAL MANAGER

Effective May 1, S. R. Stevens, who comes here from London, becomes Bell Telephone Company commercial manager at Newmarket.

Due to expanding business, the appointment of Manager Stevens is made to permit C. W. Holmes to devote his full time to his specialty which, through the years, has been the important work of construction and maintenance of telephone plant facilities in this community.

Manager Stevens has had a long and varied experience in telephone work. His previous duties have equipped him admirably to assume his new responsibilities in this important telephone-using territory.

In addition to Newmarket, Manager Stevens will have supervision over Bell telephone exchanges at Aurora, Sutton, and adjacent centres, dividing his time among these to the advantage of all subscribers.

St. Andrew's Presbyterian church was well filled for a united service on Good Friday morning. Rev. Dr. McIntyre presided, giving the invocation, and introducing two new pastors, Rev. J. H. Wells and Adjutant A. D. MacFavish of the Salvation Army.

Rev. A. J. Patstone read the scripture lesson, and Rev. J. H. Wells explained the meaning of the Easter story. Adjutant MacFavish gave the prayer and Rev. W. S. Alexander asked the benediction.

There was a united choir. Mrs. Leonard Little sang a solo.

Era printing prices are low.

Senior Fourth Students Saw Some Things You'd Not Believe

Fifty-two students of the senior fourth of Newmarket public schools visited the Royal Ontario Museum, Toronto, on Tuesday. Driven by a number of citizens, they left here about 10 a.m. and returned around 4 p.m. They took their lunches with them and had a grand time.

The children were under the supervision and leadership of H. A. Jackson, principal of public schools, Miss N. Holladay, principal of Alexander Muir school, and Dr. J. C. R. Edwards, member of the public school board.

It would be easier to tell what they didn't see than what they did see. They were quite impressed with the dinosaur skeletons found in Alberta (more fearful than social credit), one labelled 3,000,000 years old. They all saw the mummies, the mortal remains of people who lived and breathed in ancient Egypt. They saw totem poles, restorations of Indian life, suits of armor, weapons and firearms of every imaginable kind, hoop-skirts, Roman coins, primitive plows and household implements. In fact, they saw things you'd not believe, and they thought it was a great way to learn history.

Debentures Off Main St. Now-More Wanted?

Main St. Badly Congested, Widening Proposed As Remedy

ESTIMATED COST IS LOW

Last week's change of the speed law in towns from 20 miles to 30 miles an hour revives an old subject, namely, the widening of Main St. It is pointed out that when cars are parked at both sides of Newmarket's business section there is barely room left for two other cars to creep past each other, and yet Main St. is a county highway.

Dr. L. W. Dales, chairman of the town's finance committee, told The Era that about four years ago W. B. Redfern, town engineer, estimated the cost of taking a foot and a half off the sidewalks at each side of Main St., removing the light poles and wiring from Main St. and erecting cluster lights to illuminate Main St. at $7,000. This estimate counted on the use of relief labor and a government relief subsidy.

"I would think that this project could be carried through at a cost of $500 a year spread over 20 years," Dr. Dales said. As the result of local improvement debentures having been paid off Main St. property-owners will notice a lightening in their taxation this year. The Era learned from N. L. Mathews, K.C., town clerk and solicitor.

Asked how a debenture for the improvement of Main St. would be divided between the town and Main St. owners, Mr. Mathews said: "That would rest with the council. But as the merchants themselves would be the principal beneficiaries, they would probably have to bear a substantial part of the cost."

"The widening of Main St. and the erection of a municipal building, first proposed by former Mayor William Keith, to contain clerk's office, police court, cells, library, fire hall and council chamber, are the two principal needs of the town," Dr. Dales declared.

ENTERTAIN JUNIORS

Plans are being made by the Aurora board of trade to entertain the Aurora junior hockey team. Charles Malloy is president of the hockey club, Bert Tunney is manager, Chas. Rowntree is coach, and the players are mostly from Newmarket.

ANGELICAN JUNIORS WILL PRESENT PLAY

The Juniors of St. Paul's Anglican church are working hard on the play, "How the Princess's Pride Was Broken," taken from Hans Andersen's story of the swineherd.

The play, directed by Mrs. A. J. Patstone, will be produced in the Memorial hall on the evening of April 16 and the afternoon of April 17. The same play was presented recently in the Children's Theatre, New York.

plus expense allowance not to exceed $800; council chairman, $50; two commissioners, $400 each; two house of refuge commissioners, $100 each; five sub-committee chairmen, $50 each; total, $18,900.

"To this is added members' mileage, less the first 10 miles, at 10 cents per mile. It was estimated that this would bring the total cost to approximately $20,000.

"In opposing the bill in the House North York's member declared that the people of North York did not want this legislation foisted upon them. The bill was defeated in the house by an overwhelming majority which should be good news to the rate-payers of the county of York."

Council Wants Guarantee Settlers Won't Be Charges

Call McGoeys Plan Commendable But Fear Liability

Fears that members of the McGoeys back-to-the-land settlement in King township may at some future time become public charges were again expressed at a King township council at Nobleton on Saturday.

On motion of Councillors E. M. Legge and C. E. Wilkinson, it was decided "to prepare an agreement with Father McGoeys and his principals and this municipality guaranteeing that all residents of that settlement (that have been or may be brought there) shall not now or for all times to come be a charge upon this municipality."

The resolution stated that the township already holds a letter from Father McGoeys, dated August 20, 1936, giving such a guarantee but that this letter does not constitute an enforceable contract. The resolution refers to "this commendable work." Similar requirements will be made of any other organizations undertaking similar settlement schemes.

Citizens' Committee Named To Work With Survey Party

University Scientists Explain Undertaking To Council

Declaring that the work to be undertaken is for the benefit of all citizens of the township, King township council decided at a meeting in Nobleton on Saturday to co-operate to the fullest extent with the scientific group surveying the natural resources of King township with funds provided by Aubrey Davis, Newmarket.

The resolution of endorsement, moved and seconded by Councillors E. M. Legge and Thomas MacMurchy, was as follows:

"Whereas Capt. Aubrey Davis of Newmarket has approached the council of this municipality (which is the municipality of his birth and the years he spent as boy to grown-up manhood) with reference to having a survey made of all natural resources and recommendations made as to the re-establishment of some of the beneficial undertakings that could be made to better this municipality as a whole.

"And whereas he has requested that this work be conducted under the Ontario Game, Hunters, Research and Protection Association.

"And whereas a number of members of the above association, consisting of the various professors of the heads of the departments which this survey takes in from the University of Toronto, have waited upon this council and outlined the nature of the work to be undertaken.

"And whereas Capt. Davis has graciously undertaken the cost of the survey for this year.

"Therefore be it resolved (a) that this council goes on record as endorsing the idea in its entirety and calls upon all its citizens when approached by the representatives of this research

DISCUSS LIFE, WORSHIP

Life and worship are like Siamese twins; cut them apart and both die. These two cannot be separated, what is done with the one will affect the other and vice versa. As we prepare our lives, we also prepare our worship. When we neglect our worship, we also neglect our lives.

Christian Endeavorers consider worship a part of active life, and next Tuesday evening at 8.00 o'clock they are going to strive to find how worship can fit in among all activities.

Meet in the basement of the Christian-Congregational church, come and meet young people who are giving and discussing something worth thinking about. You are welcome.

KNOCKING AT OUR DOOR

Now is the time to seek to attract new industries to the town of Newmarket. An opinion was quoted in these columns last week to the effect that there are British firms looking for Canadian factory sites and that they prefer towns to cities. Here is another opinion, taken from a Toronto advertising journal, "Marketing" (March 27):

"A deep-thinking advertising man sees advantages in the multiplication of private brand merchandise. Thus: the concentration of supply in a few large producing units will tend to break up; more and more will private brand factories be established in cheap-production centres, thus building up industries in numerous small-city and small-town communities, with obvious social advantages; with lower living costs as found in smaller communities, workers will have a larger margin of real wages and so will be enabled to live better; the strike menace will lessen; consumer prices on private brand merchandise will be below those of nationally advertised lines, which may force makers of nationally advertised lines to move to small community centres where labor costs will be less."

MONETARY THEORIES

It is interesting to conjecture on what grounds the next federal election will be fought. (Evidently the next Ontario election is not to be fought on the school question.) Will it be an old-fashioned tariff election or a modern unemployment election? Will the socialist ideas of the C. C. F. be a factor in the next contest? Will there be a Reconstruction party or will the Hon. H. H. Stevens have returned to the Conservative fold? Will the public still be interested in the intricacies of banking and monetary theories? Paul E. Angle, Richmond Hill rose-grower, who was the chief organizer of the Reconstruction campaign for this riding in the last election, has not forgotten the banks and banking. He had quite a long and interesting letter in the Richmond Hill Liberal last week.

Banks and Banking

His argument is that the business of banks should be restricted to accepting deposits and to lending money actually in their possession. The government should have the sole right to issue credit or money. Presumably he does not refer to bank notes, which are now issued by the Bank of Canada, but to lending money which the bank doesn't actually possess, that is, lending money by crediting the borrower with a deposit which it may never have to pay out in cash. He speaks of "the primary monopoly granted to our chartered banks to issue 95 per cent. of all instruments of exchange which serve as money in exchanging goods. I hasten to explain that I do not blame the banks or the bankers. They are operating a business, just as I am, for profit. Our past governments have given them a privilege I do not enjoy, and it is my fault if I submit to such discrimination without protest to the government which is supposed to represent me as well as the banks."

Mr. Angle's Protest

Mr. Angle goes on: "Is this not an astonishing situation; money is positively essential for modern business, and yet one of the competitive businesses of the country is given the right to issue that money when and where it is most profitable to itself. It would be just as reasonable to give a private shipping company the right to control all our waterways." We agree with Mr. Angle that the government should control credit as far as possible, trying to provide as much credit as it can in hard times and trying to restrict credit in times of over-confidence. But we do not see how it is possible to restrict a bank in the lending business to lending only as much money as it is in a position actually to pay out in cash, if the bank's credit is such that people do not want cash. All they want is the privilege of making an order on the bank in favor of other people who also do not want cash. The bank has confidence in the borrower and the individuals to whom the borrower wishes to pay the borrowed money have confidence in the bank.

Where Credit Originates

The credit originates with the borrower and the bank underwrites or guarantees the individual's credit to make it acceptable to the general public. The bank turns the individual's credit into a bank deposit. In a sense, the bank is turning the individual's credit into money, but it is not "creating" credit, as is often charged. The same thing would happen if the bank or anyone else sufficiently and favorably known endorsed the note of an individual so that it might pass freely from hand to hand as money. The bank is in the double business, as we see it, of lending the money deposited with it (and this is generally said to be only one-tenth of a Canadian bank's business) and of turning the credit of reliable individuals into generally acceptable credit. The bank does not "create" credit but in turning individual credit, that is, the individual's reputation for meeting his obligations, into generally acceptable credit, the bank makes use of its own credit, that is, its own reputation for meeting its obligations. Without this reputation all borrowers or all persons to whom borrowers issued cheques would demand cash from the bank and the bank could not produce it, for all the bank is doing is guaranteeing the credit of individuals. Without this reputation the bank would be restricted to lending the money deposited with it and there would be little or none of that.

So We Differ

So we cannot agree to any great extent with Mr. Angle. If we were looking for a weak spot in the Canadian banking system we would point, first, to the banks' too great willingness to lend in times of prosperity and too great reluctance to lend in times of depression. Even in these matters, however, the banks are acting as any sensible privately-owned business would act. No one bank could afford to put the brakes on prosperity confidence while its competitors were making easy money or to take depression risks in order to bring about a prosperity which its competitors would share equally. Secondly, we would point out that the existence of so many different banks makes it impossible for them to direct credit into the channels where it is most needed. For instance, under the present set-up a bank will have to lend money to help a promising new pulp and paper mill in Ontario even though Canada may already have too many mills and even though the operation of the new mill may put out of business another mill in Quebec, perhaps a customer of the same bank. The bank has no choice in the matter, for if it doesn't take the good Ontario business another bank will, and it will have the bad Quebec business anyway. In the third place, we would criticize the costly duplication of services and general banking set-up which does not permit during a "cheap money" period a lower rate than six per cent for fully secured small loans, and is not even then able to pay good wages to many of its employees. Competition is sometimes a useful thing but in this instance monopoly could be a better servant.

Private Or Public Ownership

For ourselves, we would not be afraid of a private ownership monopoly, under public or statutory control. We believe that a single commercial bank in Canada would be in a position, to, and would, control credit not only with a view to a profit but with a long view toward the welfare of Canada. Nor would we be afraid of a public ownership monopoly. Another depression as severe as the present depression will bring about state banking, we would guess, and we see no reason why the men who are carrying on Canada's banks today could not make an even greater success of a state bank.

ONTARIO REFORMATORY

As we never know when we may be sent to the Ontario Reformatory ourselves, we are quite interested in the Madden report on the institution following the recent uprising there. The Barrie Examiner has the following to say:

"Judge Madden, in his report on conditions at the Ontario Reformatory at Guelph frowns on the making of such an institution into a 'show place.' We cannot at all agree with Judge Madden on this point. Prison labor has been used to advantage in beautifying the environment of the Guelph institution, which is not supposed to house hardened criminals but men amenable to reforming influences. Beauty in nature, such as is seen in the landscape work around the reformatory, is a wholesome, helpful influence, much more likely to turn the thoughts of the prisoners toward a happy normal life than forbidding grey walls and unlovely surroundings would be."

Inconsistency

The recommendation that the grounds should be made as plain and severe as possible is out of keeping with the very sensible recommendation that education should be the dominant note in the institution. More beauty in their lives and earlier environment might have kept many from being sent to the reformatory. Another recommendation, that outside guards be provided with guns, seems dubious. It smacks of education to the "tune of the hickory stick." It would be better to give more people jobs as guards. Another recommendation, for the separation of various types of offenders, seems sound.

MR. SPEAKER

The Ontario legislature, as a unit of government, is crying almost as loudly as the county council for abolition, the county council because it has nothing to do and takes a long time to do it, and the provincial legislature because it has a lot to do but spends the time bickering. Any follower of the debates at Toronto and at Ottawa will notice a distinct difference in the tone. At Ottawa the members address Mr. Speaker, and refer to other members in the third person, but in the Ontario legislature the members, both Liberals and Conservatives, and leaders as well as rank and file, freely address each other across the floor of the house as "You." Ottawa too slips into the dangerous second person occasionally, but not so habitually as Toronto. Then again Mr. Speaker at Toronto is not nearly so strict as Mr. Speaker at Ottawa about the sort of language he permits. Some of the language used and not withdrawn at Toronto this year has not looked very nice in print. It would not have been permitted at Ottawa. The other day, for instance, a member was about to make a statement about some action of Mr. Bennett's and got so far as: "My right honorable friend tried devious methods while he headed the government—" when Mr. Bennett interrupted with: "The word 'devious,' I am afraid, the honorable member must withdraw." The member continued: "Well, various or different methods. He tried different methods in order to help out the situation which he himself had largely created. He tried, for instance, a bonus to the wheat grower of western Canada." Few of us would see anything objectionable in the use of the word "devious" meaning "different." Mr. Bennett evidently thought the word capable of interpretation as meaning "not straight," and so "dishonest." We can't think that Miss Macphail and Mrs. Black would be very much at ease at Queen's Park.

"Strong men have blanchied, and shot their wives. Rather than send them to St. Ives." Reading Hansard, another point strikes us, and it is that those who make speeches at Ottawa are well informed and make their speeches following a good deal of study and thought. Do you have that impression when you read speeches made at Queen's Park?

Premier Hepburn is being given credit for having seen that he was wrong in principle in introducing the separate school assessment legislation. But surely he isn't wrong just because the measure did not prove popular.

PAY FOR COUNCILLORS

Declares the Collingwood Enterprise-Bulletin: "In Bowmanville there is talk of paying the town councillors three dollars a meeting. In Brampton the fixture is five dollars a meeting for 26 meetings. Here in Collingwood it is also five bucks a meeting and no one appears to be hurt. All other legislative bodies are recompensed, some, it is said, to an extent much more than they earn. As to this we cannot say, but experience has taught that a five spot for councillors, if at all interested, is not too much."

The police commission is asking Main St. merchants to leave a light burning in their stores at night. St. Gwillimbury says if anybody wants to break into his store, let him stumble around in the dark.

"Easter Tide"

We tuned in to a "Good Friday" broadcast, the evening of that day, and I indulged in some smart mental gymnastics as I strove to reconcile my idea of a Good Friday program with part of the one to which we listened.

You will notice that I say part, for some parts of it were beautiful. There was a magnificent rendering of "The Pilgrim's Chorus," "The Angelus," and Schubert's "Ave Maria." But, and here was the rub, the rest of the program was a decided let down.

At any other time one would have had the utmost pleasure in the other numbers of the program, but to hear these numbers, which had nothing to do with the poignant memories which the day had called forth, was unpleasant.

Many of us can remember when Good Friday was observed by only a few branches of the church, but gradually the feeling that the most tragic, yet most wonderful day in the world's history should not go unobserved, grew. For why should people, calling themselves Christians and placing all their hopes of immortality on the resurrection, ignore the day which saw the Savior suffer and die.

Now, on Good Friday, quietness reigns where, ordinarily, the stir and bustle of work prevails; we are free to follow, like the great crowds on the first Good Friday, who poured out from the gates of Jerusalem, to witness what, to the chief priests, was their goal—the elimination of a rebel against their rule—a rule grown heartless and empty, from lack of real religious inspiration.

His disciples followed, in heartbroken dismay—their hopes shattered, their belief in Jesus as the Messiah gone, but anxious to see the last act in the drama.

The Roman soldiers were there to do their hideous duty and the rabble was there to see and hear and make horrible the Savior's last hours by their revilings and gibes.

We can still hear and, in imagination, see all this and so, it seems to me, and I imagine to most of us, utterly incongruous that into the midst of a Good Friday program should come something alien and, like the talk of the untouched, uninterested spectators at the crucifixion, serve only to jar the thoughts concentrated on the culmination of the Supreme Drama—the sacrifice of a Savior on the cold altar of a world's unbelief.

Then comes Saturday, while the world lies waiting in solemn stillness—not as on that first Saturday, when all seemed lost, but we now wait in the sure and certain hope of the resurrection.

On Easter Sunday morning I listened to a sermon by a preacher whom I have greatly admired; who often seemed to touch on the very fears and worries which assail us all. But in his Easter message I was sadly disappointed.

My theology may need the re-thinking we hear so much about, but it is what I believe and no one likes to have anyone undermining the foundations of one's belief.

The preacher spoke of the marvelous resurrection of all things in the spring—at Easter.

More particularly he emphasized the re-awakening of hope in our hearts, of new faith in the future. He spoke of the resurrection of Christ which occurs over and over, as some great deed is done in His name; some wrong righted, some gift to the world, but he left one in no doubt as to his belief that the first Easter day saw only a spiritual resurrection—just an awakening of the belief, crushed in the first few days after the crucifixion, that His spirit could not die, but from wherever He lived again, He would animate and fill them with power and the love of humanity.

I may be like Thomas, but it seems to me a physical resurrection was needed to inspire and fortify the disciples, for what they had to face. If we deny the physical resurrection of our Lord, it seems to me we may as well discard His Divinity.

Buddha, Mahomet—any great religious leader, had power to found a religion—but none of them rose from the dead!

It is the centre of our belief—our hope that we will once again be with those we have "loved long since and lost awhile."

It seems hard, in these days, when faith is apt to falter and courage fail, when confronted by existing conditions, that even those who are supposed to be teachers should find it necessary to try to make over to suit a few, beliefs which are rooted in our hearts and souls. To me the glory of Easter would depart, had there been no shining angels there to spread the great tidings—"He is not here, He is risen!"

TRAINING LEADERS

The Leaders' Institute held at Pickering College on March 24 marked the end of three months activity in adult education. Had this plan of adult education been launched in September instead of January, its accomplishments might easily have been more than double what they were. But Pickering College community extension service had to have a beginning and the New Year may prove as good a time as any.

One study group per week has been the rate of progress during the winter. With about seven people in each group, this would make an average addition of one member daily. This is apart from the other contacts which have been formed that should yield results in the future. Add also the experience gained in study group technique.

Time and time again we have commented on the fact that initiative will depend on a few scattered leaders. The success of the Leaders' Institute would seem to add strength to this contention. Some 25 people who have been active as leaders of groups took a very heavy day on matters related to the work. On those people and a few others must depend the relaunching of the groups and the building of new ones next autumn.

Now that seeding and other spring work loom on the horizon, the groups must be expected to slow down. Only the most interested people will carry on during the summer. It is the intention of the extension secretary to devote his limited efforts to these people. It is his hope to meet them at least once a month singly or in small groups.

Although October would seem to be a better month than March for the launching of a reading club, a beginning has only now been made. A few of the most enthusiastic readers have already joined and some books have been loaned through the service. Certain it is that a leader must read and the spare moments can be put to good use in this way. The secretary has now worked out a plan whereby reading can be promoted and guided in conjunction with visits to local leaders.

Opinion at the Leaders' Institute seemed to be greatly in favor of retaining "Co-operation" as one of the main subjects of study. Our people want a type of education that can lead to social action. They want to learn the things that will help them to raise their economic position as a community.

It has been proven that our people will respond to a lead in study group work. There are many serious minds who are concerned with social betterment. They are anxious to learn of what can be done. They want to get their hands into the social action to be in tune with their two greatest traditions: Christianity and democracy.

In Cape Breton and elsewhere this educational lead has yielded a bountiful harvest. In this area we have as able a people as there are anywhere. We have unusual leadership. We have many facilities at our disposal. There is nothing to prevent us from the achievement of great and lasting good except our own inertia.

Chips April Fools Chubby

BY RUTH DINGMAN HEBB

Chubby inquired, "I've often wondered about it. Is it a badge of honor?"

"Well, that's the story that my mother told me," laughed the Meadowlark. "It seems that years and years ago the farmers suddenly realized how much good the Meadowlarks did in attacking the enemies of their crops, the insects and the weed seeds, so they decorated them. Ever since then the Meadowlarks have had these black bands as an emblem of their good service. You can believe it or not, but that's one of the stories that is handed down in the Meadowlark family from generation to generation. I must remember to pass it on to my 1937 family."

"Hello, friends and fellow countrymen," greeted Chips as he hurried up to the group. "Did you hear that Bob Bobolink has come to town and is bubbling and gurgling his cheery song away over in that far field? Tell him I sent you over, when you see him."

"Really!" exclaimed Chubby, excitedly. "How jolly. Let's go and find him." He started to fly off.

"April fool!" shouted Chips after him. "You silly billy—you ought to know that Bob doesn't get here until May. This would be ridiculously early."

"I should say so," agreed the Meadowlark, laughing. "These cold days have been embarrassing enough, even for me and no Bobolink could stand them, I'm sure."

"Well, shiver my feathers," cried Chubby. "So you tried to make a fool out of me, did you, Chips? You just be careful. I'll get even with you yet."

"A stranger might think that the Meadowlark had been decorated for some gallant deed, with that black ribbon across his breast," thought Chubby. "I must ask him about it."

"Why do you wear that black necktie," Mr. Meadowlark?

"My wife likes tea for breakfast, while I like coffee."

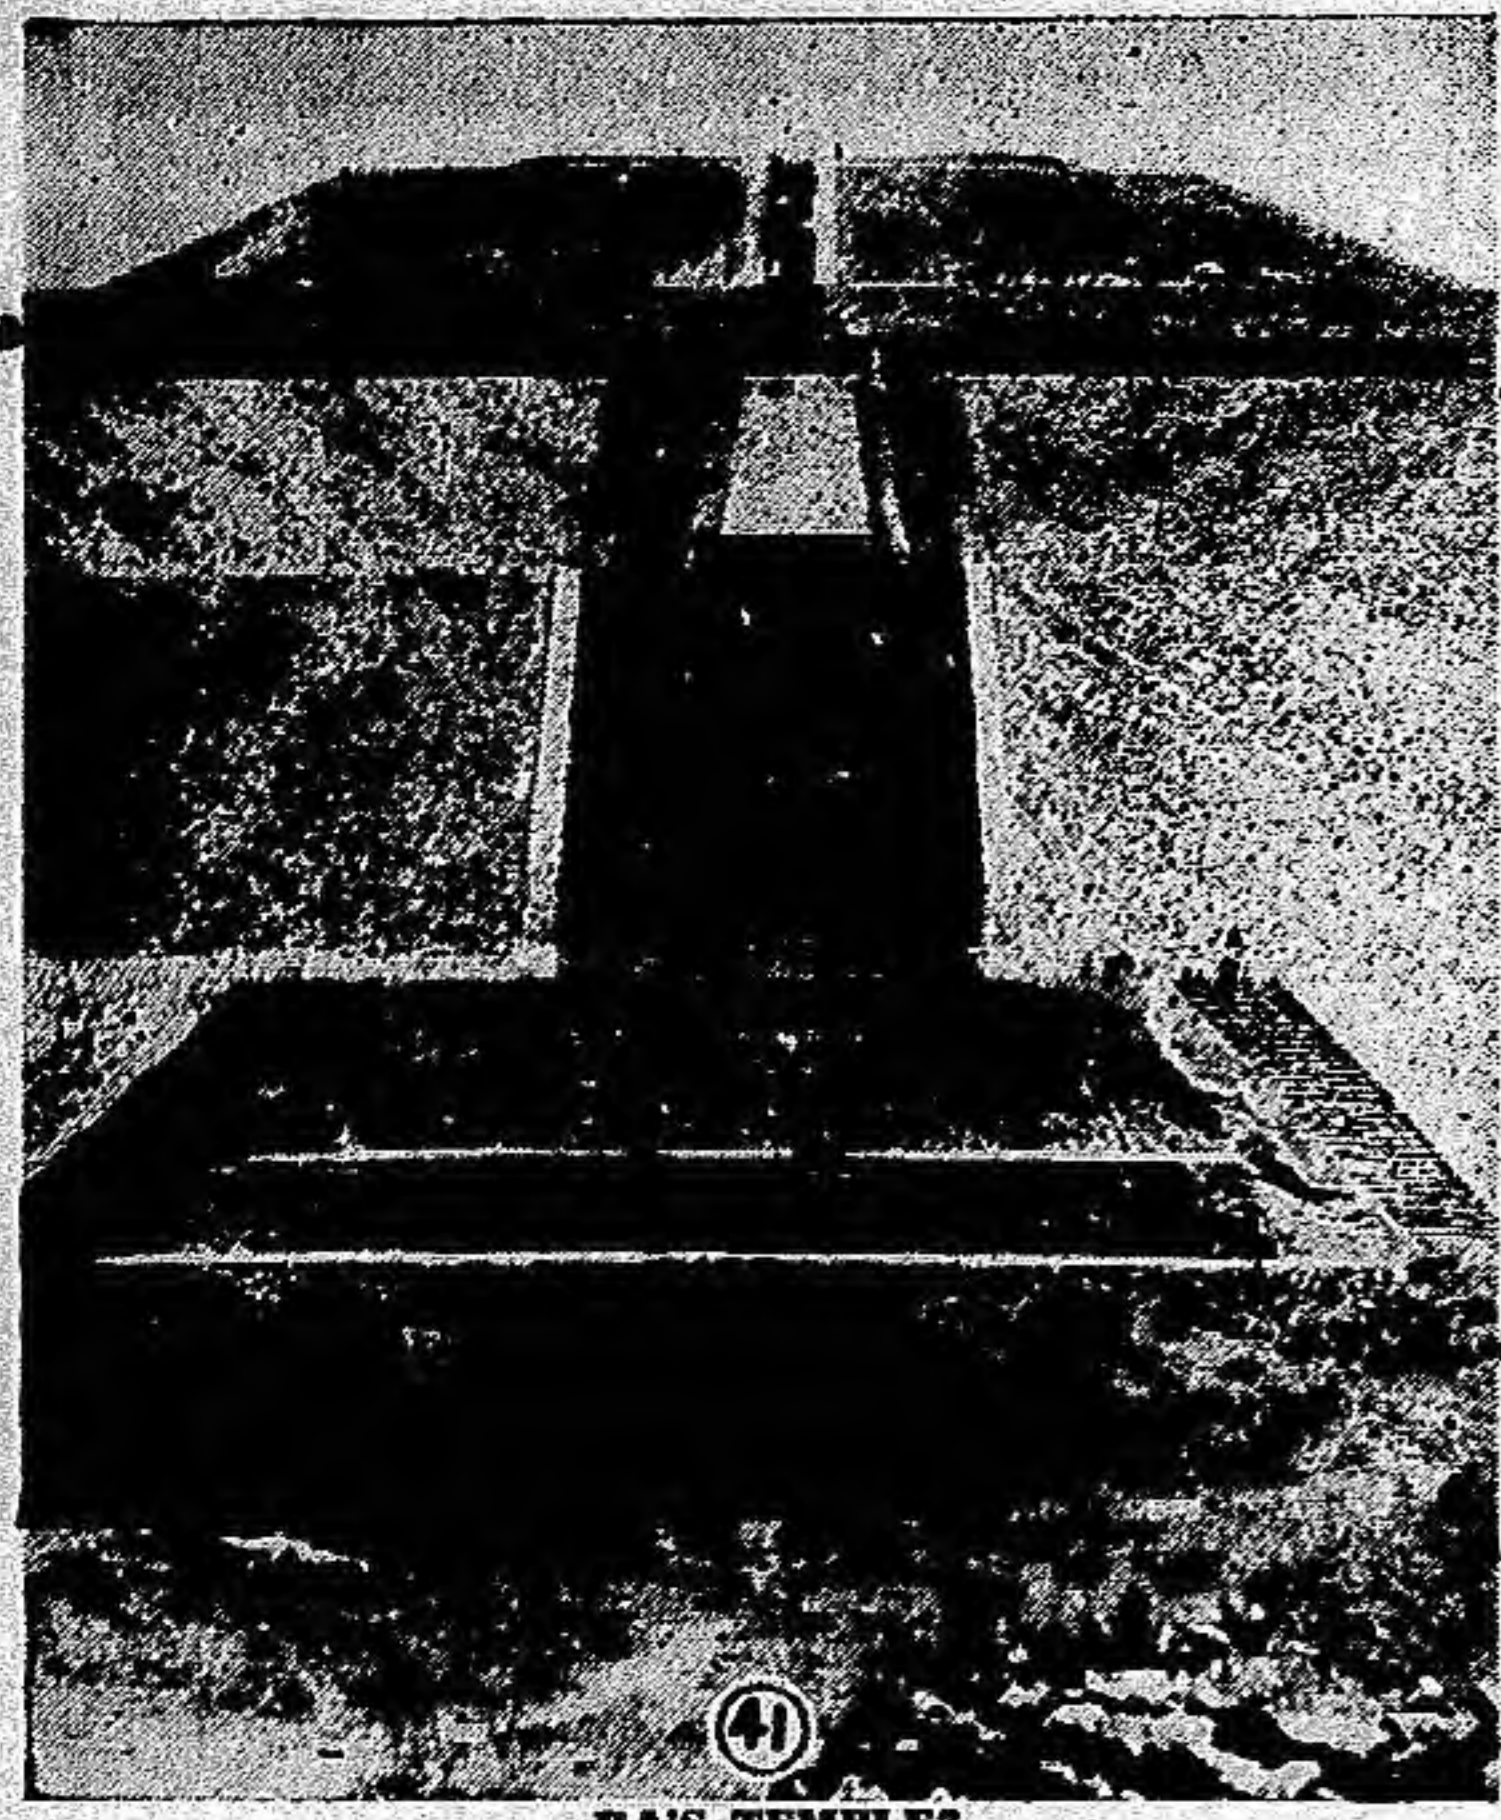

"You'll soon get used to tea."

It is questionable whether enough consideration was given to the changes in the speed limits. Thirty miles an hour is far too fast for Newmarket's narrow Main St., and 50 miles an hour is too fast for Yonge St. at night, yet in neither of these instances would a court be likely to convict a driver of reckless driving. It is not desirable to have unenforced laws on the statute books, but what about the requirement that motorists should slow to 15 miles an hour at town or city view-obstructed intersections and to ten miles an hour at town or city view-obstructed intersections?

The Bell Telephone Company announces miscellaneous rate reductions which they state will save telephone users of Ontario and Quebec upwards of $600,000 yearly.

Reduced charges on rural telephones will save farmers $100,000 a year.

Other important items on which charges are cut are for installing and moving telephones, for short-haul long distance calls, and for the hand type of telephone which after May 1st will cost only 15 cents instead of 30 cents per month more than the desk telephone.

The expectation is that the reductions will lead to a still more widespread use of the telephone, increasing its value to all users.

KING TOWNSHIP VILLAGES ASK SPEED LIMITS

Declaring that speeding motorists are a hazard to life, King township council at a meeting at Nobleton on Saturday decided to ask approval of the minister of highways for a by-law limiting speed through various police villages of the township on "township, county and provincial highways."

A resolution, moved by Councillor L. B. Goodfellow and seconded by Councillor E. M. Legge, set out the following reasons for the requested speed limit: (a) Motorists sweep through specified villages at excessive rates of speed, endangering life of residents; (b) fast driving causes excess dust nuisance; (c) narrow pavements; (d) sharp intersections; (e) and general causes same as a city's only in a smaller way, but more dangerous because cities have better traffic regulations. The resolution adds: "It also protects the motorist as to the death of a small child or any resident."

The road superintendent was instructed to locate four dumping grounds in the township and to get the purchase prices for the council, on the motion of Councillors L. B. Goodfellow and C. E. Walkington.

The township's share of county hospitalization for February was $30. Arthur Wellsley was paid $9.55 for his services as school attendance officer.

The council asked the clerk to acknowledge a department of highways' communication concerning Workmen's Compensation Board's accident insurance and to ask full particulars of cost.

The council decided to allow two per cent. discount on taxes paid on or before Oct. 1 and one per cent. on taxes paid during October. Pointing out that the municipality has for years charged a penalty on its unpaid taxes after Dec. 15, the resolution expressed the belief that the discount would save the council a considerable sum in interest on borrowings.

The police village of Schomberg was paid $40 re the Bartlett fire in accordance with the agreement with the township.

The road superintendent was authorized to meet representatives of the Bell Telephone Co. re the changing of poles and lines from the second to the fourth on the north townline.

The following accounts were among those paid: J. P. Jefferson, long distance calls, $2.12; E. Williams, $7; H. H. Sawdon, re amendments, $1.50; F. M. Bayne, $27.60; W. E. Egan, flowers, $10; Gus Farquhar, constable services, $2.50; Schomberg Telephone Co., long distance calls (clerk), $12.46; Registry office, $3.30; H. H. Sawdon, cartage, $1.30; R. Walker, $4.20; A. W. Archibald, $18.70; F. M. Bayne, $22; P. Muirhead, $7.

Relief totalled $2,373.59; U. R. works No. 3, $771.05; road voucher No. 4, $600.60; road voucher No. 5, $484.47.

DICTATORS ARE NOT CHRISTIAN

Sincerity And Truth Needed Today, Anglican Pastor Declares

The resurrection of Christ and its bearing on the life of today were the theme of Easter sermons at local churches.

"The resurrection of Christ gave us the revival of learning, the discovery of printing, modern science and the modern world," declared Rev. J. H. Wells at Trinity United church.

"The difference between the changing west and the unchanging east is the quickening spirit given by the resurrection," Mr. Wells said.

Mrs. I. Harris sang the solo part in a beautiful anthem, "As It Began To Dawn." Miss Jean Robinson and Wm. Jones sang the solo parts in another Easter anthem, "They Have Taken Away My Lord."

"The Risen Lord," was the subject of Rev. W. S. Alexander at the Christian-Congregational church. Dr. Alexander quoted: "Present-day disciples of Jesus are to find the Easter meaning in the facts of the present-day Easter."

Dr. Alexander spoke of the nature of God, the facts of history and the voice of Christian experience. On the first of these topics he said that "we can find evidence of immortal life in God's goodness to us," and quoted John Fiske: "I believe in the immortality of the soul as a supreme act of faith in the reasonableness of God's work."

Discussing the facts of Christian history, Dr. Alexander said that "the church emerged out of doubt and disappointment. The faith of the disciples had been wrecked. If there had been no resurrection, they would not have become the fiery servants they were. There would have been no church."

"The voice of Christian experience is that Christ liveth within us, and gives us strength we don't have without his presence."

The choir sang Easter anthems under the leadership of the organist and choir leader, L. K. Farr, Aurora.

Speaking on "The Mystery of the Kingdom of God," Rev. Dr. D. McIntyre at St. Andrew's Presbyterian church declared that world political conditions of today were contrary to Christ's kingdom. While dictators hold power by force, he said, Christ's kingdom was one of love. Christ's death resulted from his refusal to take back the statement that God's kingdom is spiritual.

"The measure of the power of the resurrection was conditioned by the reality of the death Christ died," Dr. McIntyre said.

The choir sang beautifully, "O Death, Where Is Thy Sting?" and the Misses Annie and Mary Willis sang a duet, "I Am the Resurrection and the Life." In the evening, when Dr. McIntyre preached on "The Open Sepulchre," Miss Mary Willis sang a solo, "Jesus of Nazareth."

The church was gorgeously decorated for Easter with lilies, hydrangeas, daffodils and ferns. "Great responsibilities rest on Christians today," said Rev. A. J. Patstone at St. Paul's Church of England, preaching on I Cor. 5:7, "Christ, our passover, is sacrificed for us; therefore let us keep the feast; not with the old leaven, nor with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth."

"Two things need to be cultivated," said Mr. Patstone, "sincerity, the antithesis of hypocrisy, in business, politics and world affairs, and second, truth, the antithesis of humbug."

A beautiful anthem, "O Death, Where Is Thy Sting?" by Spiney, was sung by the choir.

Why Commodity Prices Must Advance And Some Contributory Factors

Extracts from an Address before the Shoe Retailers Association at Toronto on Feb. 15

By Elmer Davis
Vice-President and Managing Director, A. Davis & Sons Ltd., Kingston, Ont.

(This article, taken from the Monetary Times, deals with a subject of which the public is likely to become increasingly conscious, namely, rising commodity prices. The article is of particular interest to Newmarket, first, because it concerns the leather industry, and second, because Mr. Davis is a son of the late Hon. E. J. Davis and is well-known here.)

The subject of the advanced price of commodities, as the subject is worded it might include all commodities, is one that is too large for me to undertake. I have not the knowledge, the adequate knowledge to discuss it intelligently and time would not permit, if I did. I am, therefore, going to interpret the subject as I believe it was intended to be interpreted, namely, that what is referred to is the prices of hides, leather and shoes, which, after all, are the commodity subjects in which those of us gathered here today are more directly interested.

Permit me before entering into a general discussion of that to make three or four direct statements of a general character which perhaps may aid us somewhat as we consider this subject.

First, economists tell us that prosperity and prices go in cycles. If you accept that theory as correct, then I ask you to go back over the last few years and remember that commencing with 1930 and for a little over two years thereafter we had a toboggan slide of prices. It came down the side of a mountain with terrific rapidity. It hit the valley below and for about a year it meandered across the bottom of that valley. Then, in March, 1933, it struck the first upward incline and from that time to the present, prices have been gradually, slowly, if you will, but nevertheless steadily, rising, and while it is true we are only about half way up the other side, as I will perhaps be able to indicate and to prove to you later, notwithstanding that, we are still ascending and we have a considerable area still to go.

The next statement I want to make is this, that hides and skins, the basic raw material from which the products that you and I are interested in are originally made, are a by-product and my reason for mentioning that and the significance of it in connection with this discussion is that no change in values affects in any way the supply of that raw material. The fact that you raised prices does not increase the supply, whatever, and that is a contradiction to most other raw materials. It does not increase it because these articles we are speaking of are only produced when you require food-meat values for food, and the hides or the skin is a by-product. That applies to practically everything that goes into leather. There are a few exceptions but for the great general principle it applies.

Again, when the prices go down it does not diminish the supply, except in those cases where at outlying points, transportation is very expensive. It may not be profitable to move hides and skins into the centres where they can be consumed. Hides and skins are a by-product and their supply is not amenable to the price of the commodity.

The next thing I want to say is this, that hides and skins are a world commodity. That is something we lose sight of sometimes. We forget that they are a commodity not only produced more or less throughout the world, but today the various parts of the world that require them for leather purposes draw their supplies from the world over, and with modern transportation, modern facilities of communication, we are brought so much more closely together that prices are affected more rapidly by world conditions.

And, then, this last statement which I wish to make as a statement is this, that hides and skins over a period of the last few years have been lower in price on the North American continent than the world level of prices.

Just keep that before you as we think of the subjects that are coming. Hide prices were at zero in midsummer of 1932. At that time, light packer cows, which is the basic hide class for upper leather, at least, touched the low point of 4 cents per pound. Keep that figure in mind. At the same time calf skins touched 5½ cents per pound. Last week in the city of Toronto the same class of hides sold at 13½ cents per pound and calf skins sold in the city of Montreal last week at 21 cents per pound. In a conversation with Chicago this morning I was advised that late Saturday hides of the same classification sold at 14 cents in Chicago.

But, you may say to me, "Why do you assume high prices will hold? They have fluctuated in the past, they will fluctuate again." Yes, they will sometimes. It is true they have fluctuated in the past two or three times; in the last few years prices have been on the move up and have then taken a dip down. After all, that is the natural course of things, friends. Very seldom does any commodity take a steady and permanent and continuous rise, straight up in the picture. It does sometimes in the matter of downing, but not very often on the way up. But the situation seems to have changed somewhat and there seems to be reasons to believe, as I will hope to show in a moment, why probably the advance at this time will be continuous.

May I digress for a moment to add this reason? If I ask you to make a comparison with 1914, pre-war, you will notice this same class of hides, the price of which I quoted a moment ago, and about this time of year, were selling at 19 cents a pound, as compared with 13½ or 14 cents at the present time. Now, you may say to me, "If that be true, why have hide and skin prices not risen more rapidly up to the present time?" I can't go into the whole picture, but I am going to suggest two reasons for your consideration.

Public Only Recently Shoe Conscious

In the first place, and you, gentlemen, will be able to judge better than I can as to whether my logic is good in the first reason, in the first place I suggest to you that prices have not gone up because the public at large have not until very recently become shoe conscious. They became conscious of the deficiency of their clothes, of the fact that their automobile was shabby, they became conscious of a lot of other things, but they were not conscious that their foot-covering needed replenishment, that they were down to bed-rock and ought to be buying shoes for their use.

The other reason I wish to suggest to you and which perhaps has had more effect on the North American Continent in the last three years than anything else was the terrific effect of the drought slaughter in the United States in the summer and fall of 1934, when in the period of four to five months just over 6,000,000 head of animals, producing hides and skins, were slaughtered, that normally would not have been killed at that time, or for some time thereafter, and would have been killed in a gradual way.

Now, let me refer to another thing that has a bearing on it. The North American Continent never supplies all the hides and skins that it requires. They import from various sources throughout the world — South America, Australia, New Zealand, India, and so on. In 1935, the last year for which we have complete figures, the importations, because of this depressing overload of raw material to which I have just referred, were reduced to one-eighth of its normal volume. In other words, the importation of that year were about 500,000 hides and skins, whereas the normal importation over an average of several years is 4,000,000. You can see at once that that had two effects. It reduced to that extent the supply here, but it also left a larger supply in the world markets to be absorbed and notwithstanding that larger amount that the world market had to absorb over the period of 1935-1936, world prices on hides and skins have more or less steadily advanced and are higher today than they have been at any time. It is assumed that what is left of that surplus will be wiped out, in fact some of it is now out and it will be all wiped out within the next three months.

The result of that is going to be (and I make this statement on the authority of the Tanners Council of the United States) that the probability is that during the year 1937, instead of 500,000, there will be between 4,000,000 and 6,000,000 hides and skins imported into the North American Continent.

Now, if we are going to draw to that much greater extent from world supplies outside of this continent, does it not seem a logical conclusion that world prices and, consequently, our prices as well, will increase beyond the point where we are at the present time? My judgment is that the only logical conclusion is higher world prices.

There is another factor that enters into this problem which, whether I have time to make a fair presentation to you, I must refer to. All hides and skins automatically find their way into consumable leather goods. That is the only place to which they travel and the question I must ask and I must endeavor to answer, as far as I can and leave to you to give the final answer, is will the demand during 1937 absorb a normal quantity of this raw material, particularly in regard to shoes, because shoes is the largest single item, the largest consuming item of this raw material.

Let me go back for a moment. The year 1935 saw an extremely large production of shoes on the North American continent. It was true in the United States, it was also true, perhaps, to a slightly less degree here in Canada, that because of that large production in the preceding year there probably would be a decreased production in 1936 and the first month or two of the year seemed to back up that opinion and that judgment, but as the year progressed it became increasingly evident that the reverse was to be the case and 1936 finally showed a larger shoe production than 1935. The exact extent of that increase I cannot give you as the final figures are not available, or at least I was not able to get them, but up to the end of November it was somewhere in the vicinity of an 8 per cent. increase over 1935. That shows a considerably increased production.

Now, then, will 1937 production be maintained? You, gentlemen, are much closer to the consuming public than I am, but I am going to ask you this afternoon if, as you look around and consider the conditions that exist on this continent, the increased number of employed, the increased amount of money finding its way into the hands of our former friends, the strenuous effort being made to give more and more employment, the effort that is being made to rehabilitate the building industry and to give employment in that direction which, perhaps, is the one industry that has lagged seriously behind in this recovery through which we have been going, I ask you, in the light of all these things, can you assume that there will be a decreased power or a decreased willingness on the part of the buying public to purchase shoes?

Unquestionably, unless you can see a substantially reduced shoe production as a probability, then from the standpoint of basic raw material, and its probable cost, I submit that prices must advance.

In the second place, prices must advance because of increased cost of supplementary materials. I have been dealing with the large basic raw material that goes into these products, but there are many other raw materials that go in and are necessary to make up the finished article. Take, for instance, in our tanneries, such things as extracts, greases, oils, dyes, finishers, and a hundred and one oddments that are necessary to make our leather, have practically all advanced. As I look back I can only at the moment think of one substantial raw material, supplementary raw material, that we use that we have been able to contract for for the year 1937, at the same price that we contracted for that raw material for 1936. I submit that what is true of our experience is true also in the realm of the shoe factories and I think my good friends here, on my right and left, will be familiar with this, will bear out, that in the shoe factories linings, cotton, hardware, counter-toppers, and a score of other things that go into the makeup of shoes, outside of leather, are all increasing. Therefore, if these materials are to increase we must have higher prices.

ALL MAY HEAR BOY SOPRANO

Dewi Jones Will Sing In St. Paul's Sunday Afternoon

A wonderful opportunity of hearing Dewi Jones, famous Welsh boy soprano, will be given to the citizens of Newmarket and district when he will appear as guest soloist at St. Paul's Anglican church on Sunday afternoon from 3.30 to 4.30 p.m.

Master Jones is not yet 14, but he is known throughout the United States and Canada as well as abroad as an outstanding boy singer. He made his first public appearance at the age of three. The program on Sunday will include "Prayer Perfect" by Stenson; the three best known soprano solos by Handel, "Angels ever bright and fair," "Where'er You Walk" and "Come Unto Him"; Mendelssohn's "Oh For the Wings of a Dove" from "Hear My Prayer"; and "He Wipes the Tear" by Lee.

The afternoon was chosen for the service so that members of other churches would be able to attend without interfering with their regular church attendance.

Now, then, will 1937 production be maintained? ## CHAPTER 28

Alix Carey return to Bairds-vale?

The idea was ridiculous. Alix wouldn't have used the word "ridiculous" however. She would have said that it was most improbable that she would ever want to go back. When she had left it eight years before it wasn't because she didn't like it, or because she thought it too "small town."

She had had to go after there was no one left to her in the little cottage that was haunted with the ghosts of Dorcas's music and the gay color that Felix brought into it. She was only a slip of a girl then, hardly more than a child, but she had felt the need to go out into the world, to see for herself where its byways would lead her.

She supposed, remembering that, that in one short year she had skyrocketed to the top of her profession. At 25 to be an executive in the New York office of a recognized manufacturing concern rated, in these days of hard-earned positions, as success.

Odd that a girl with all she had would want to leave it. She had an apartment that she maintained easily. She had an office with a thick carpet on the floor and her name in neat gold letters on the door. She had an ample salary and an expense account. She was one of that excited little group of career women with a future that she had envied in her stenographic days.

But it was a future that was colorless, dry and empty to her now.

It was August when Bill Boyd had said, "If you ever want a job in Bairdsvale, let me know."

That was the last thing in her mind then, and probably in Bill's.

But now it was October. An October that was an anniversary; a season dying gloriously with brave, bright colors accenting the tragedy of another year gone by. A year that had given her everything she had wanted and taken it away.

Everything was gone, everything that had been her world. Kathleen, Kim and John.

All she had left were memories and she wanted to get away from them. The mute reminders of the shallow comfortlessness of inanimate things. The clothes that hung in her closet said, "Remember the time you wore me?" She gave them away. She crowded little hats and fragile frocks into the arms of Mrs. Anderson, the Irish wife of the Swedish superintendent who lived in the basement apartment.

"God bless you, my dear! I never thought I'd be havin' such beeyootiful things. I'll be doin' you a favor for all this!" that grateful lady promised.

"Take them," she said tonelessly while she wished that she might give her the apartment in which she spent too many hours. The very streets she walked upon turned up as many reminders as the leaves that littered them.

She went to an exhibit with Max Kleermann. There was tea and conversation. There was a Viennese psychiatrist with whom she found herself sitting in an alcove.

"What is the matter with you?" he asked, blinking his eyes kindly behind their thick glasses. Alix looked into his eyes and knew how direct his question was.

"She didn't know his name; he didn't know hers. It was unlikely that they would ever meet again."

"Everything inside me," she answered. "I'm caught in a net of my own weaving and I can't find my way out. I'm unhappy, lost, and I don't know what to do."

"Dreamless?" he asked. Alix knew he meant to ask her if she had nothing in the future she wanted. She said:

"Yes. Once I had work but the work is part of the whole thing. It doesn't even fill my time."

"And have you lost him? Are you sure?" How wise he was!

"Yes. That wasn't of my doing. I made the mistake of thinking I had him. No I am bereft, I have nothing more."

It wasn't what she said but the absolute conclusiveness in her sensitive, intelligent face that convinced him that she was correct in thinking whatever she did.

"Why don't you go away from here? Away from all that tugs at you with countless strings of remembrance?"

"Away from New York?" She stared at him surprised. "I thought psychiatrists were the apostles of the tenet that you can't run away from yourself."

"You are almost right. Not quite. You can remake yourself into a person you might not want to run away from."

"How?" she asked tensely. "I can't tell you that. You will know yourself. You are not happy as you are but you can make yourself a different person as though you were an actress. Play a new role, with different stage sets, with new lines — a new audience."

There was something that he was trying to tell her but Alix didn't quite understand. "How can you expect me to pretend that I am a play and I am only an actress?"

for making you listen to my troubles." That is my work," he said, "but I've never listened to trouble from such a beautiful young lady before."

Alix gazed pensively at his kind face after he had said she was beautiful. She had forgotten how she looked.

"Perhaps I won't have my troubles when we meet again." "You should never have them."

That night, for the first time, Alix began to think of Bairdsvale. A nostalgia for its peace and quiet came upon her. She got out the three letters that Bill had written her since his return.

There was one paragraph she wanted to reread.

"I dropped in to see Mae Alexander who runs the Antiques and Interior Decorating Shop. Bill wrote 'the day after I got back, and told her about you. She was mighty interested in what you had done with these new fangled fabrics. She asked me a lot of questions I couldn't answer. You'd better come out some time and pay us a visit."

Alix opened her desk, got out her notepad and pen and began to write hurriedly. She wrote, "Dear Bill, I've been thinking of you since I wrote and tore up sheet after sheet. What she had to write was more difficult than any piece of advertising copy she had ever worked over, smoothing and rewriting."

This letter had to ask for something with precisely the right note of interest and conviction without telling her true reason for wanting it. Not an easy thing to do and make convincing. Would anyone believe that a girl with a successful career would be willing to give it up and go back to a small place and start all over? Would a man who had seen the glamorous side of New York, which she knew, believe that she wanted to give it up without a good reason?

At last she blotted the finished page and read what she had written:

"You were right," her neat handwriting read, "New York is all right for a little while. I've been thinking of Bairdsvale ever since you were here and I want to see it again. I was happier there than I am in New York — she wrote it truthfully — as to tense — and I hope you meant it when you said that if I wanted a job you might be able to arrange it for me. It doesn't cost much to live there, I know, and I'd be willing to work for very little. I wonder if you'd like to talk to your Miss Alexander and ask her if she'd consider taking me in?"

There was more to the letter but that was all she said about a job.

Before she had time to change her mind, she put on her coat and ran to the street to post it.

Perhaps a girl could make a new life for herself and come alive again.

CHAPTER 29

"Telephone for you, Bill," the 10-year-old "clerk" of the William Boyd & Son Hardware and Implement company, announced as he stuck his head in the door of the shop at the back of the store.

Bill wiped his greasy hands on worn overalls and put down a screw driver.

"Who is it?" he asked and gave a regretful glance at the gadgets on the work bench and another at the clock.

"Dorcas, I guess."

Bill followed him through the store into the office. You wouldn't know, looking around that office with its two rolled-top desks, the old-fashioned swivel chairs, and the litter of catalogs, that it was the office of business men who rated their solid wealth at nearly a million dollars.

Bill picked up the receiver. There were no French telephones in Bairdsvale.

"Hello," he said.

"Bill, I hope I didn't call you away from something important."

"It's okay, Dorcas. I was going to call you anyway. How'd you like to see Joe Brown at the movies tonight?"

It was Wednesday night. Bill always called Dorcas Hill on Wednesdays. Wednesdays and Sundays were "beau nights" in Bairdsvale.

"Were you?" she said as pleased as though she hadn't expected it. "I've got something else in mind. Nell Chatterton and Bob, Catherine Fox and Herb were trying to get up a bridge game, but I thought it would be fun to get a steak and drive down to the lake and cook it. It will be a grand night. There's a full harvest moon, Bill."

"Boy! That big, red moon! I haven't seen one in a while year. Remember the moon last year?"

"Last year?" He couldn't see Dorcas Hill's happy smile. "Wasn't that the night I met you?"

"Woman, it was! If some guy had left a red light burning on his truck, I wouldn't have run into it. If I hadn't run into it and jammed my hand I wouldn't have gone to the hospital and if I hadn't —"

"If you hadn't gone to the hospital and I hadn't been waiting for dad to finish up an operation we wouldn't have met."

"All right, Bill, I'll be waiting." That last statement was like Dorcas Hill — cheerful, unquestioning, undemanding, waiting.

Bill swung the telephone arm out of his way and picked up the square white envelope. He slipped the sheet of paper covered with neat handwriting out of the envelope. There was a fragrance that came with it.

A fragrance that made him think of soft, honey-colored hair of eyes dark as the blue of night skies, of something restless, hurt in a fragile girl of whom he always had been very fond.

He lit a battered pipe and, drawing on it slowly, he read and reread her letter. He was trying to see, not the words which were clear enough, but something back of them that he did not understand.

The poor kid! Trying to be brave and light when she was seeking escape from something. Alix hadn't fooled Bill Boyd.

He remembered the first time he had seen her with tears streaming down her little-girl face, hair ribbon dangling, crying her heart out because her jeering audience of small, savage boys wouldn't rescue a kitten in a tree.

Bill hadn't wanted to rescue it, but she had been so small and so lovely, too, then. But he had, and he'd punched a couple of noses because their owners had jeered at him saying, "Bill Boyd's Allie's beau!" Nevertheless he had gone off blushing a healthy red.

He'd always thought of himself as Alix's beau from then on for a good many years. Even for a year or two after she'd gone to New York. Lovely, story book Alix who would forever be the lady in distress to him.

He removed his sturdy boots from the desk and went to the safe, taking a small book from a locked compartment.

He studied the rows of figures for a while, pondered thoughtfully and drew on his pipe. Alix couldn't have anyone in the world. She didn't have a comfortable home to come back to, folk who were sympathetic.

By golly, she did!

He pulled the telephone to him and asked the operator for a number.

"Hello, Mae? . . . let me talk to Miss Alexander. . . . Hello Mae? This is Bill."

There was pleasure in Mae Alexander's voice. "Hello, Bill! I'm glad you called me. I wanted to tell you I'll be able to pay you something this month. Mrs. Trubee bought that highboy I picked up. . . ."

"Don't worry about that, Mae. I'm not disturbed about that note. I want to ask you to do a favor for me. A big favor and I want it to be just between you and me."

"Why, sure, Bill. I owe you everything I've got. I'd be delighted. What is it?"

"It's about a friend of mine. I kind of thought I'd drop around

Keswick

Mr. and Mrs. Ryan Switzer have fallen victims to the prevailing bad cold.

Miss Roslyn Van Norman is spending part of her Easter vacation visiting friends in Toronto.

Mrs. John Van Norman and the Misses Marritt spent Tuesday and Wednesday in Toronto.

Miss Elizabeth McCrea of Beaverton is visiting her aunt, Mrs. Ryan Switzer.

Mrs. Connell Marritt, who has been quite ill all winter, is able to be out again.

The services held on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings at Keswick United church during Holy week were well attended and proved a source of great joy to those able to be present.

The pastor, Rev. C. E. Fockler, presided at all services. Rev. Mr. Anderson of Sutton presented a very worth-while message on Wednesday evening. Mr. Anderson taking for his text part of the 41st verse of the 19th chapter of St. John—"Now in the place where He was crucified there was a garden"—left many fine thoughts with the congregation.

Mrs. Link sang a solo, and Miss Fockler was pianist.

Rev. Mr. Madden of Queensville was guest preacher on Thursday evening, taking the scripture reading from Hurlburt's Story of the Crucifixion. Mr. Madden held in complete silence the congregation while the familiar story was retold. Then preaching on "The Challenge of Pain," he presented many interesting views on why there should be suffering of various sorts. Mrs. Tomlinson was soloist. Both Rev. Mr. Anderson and Rev. Mr. Madden are well-known to the Keswick congregation and are always given a cordial welcome.

Rev. Mr. Fockler occupied the pulpit on Good Friday night and spoke on the last words of Jesus on the cross. There was a splendid attendance, with over 100 partaking of the holy communion.

Rev. Mr. Fockler conducted both well-attended services on Easter day, preaching appropriate sermons. The choir sang an Easter anthem, at the morning service, and in the evening a mixed quartet from Queensville, as well as Mr. Murray Huntley, assisted in the musical part of the service.

There was a reception of new members at the morning service, those becoming members of Keswick United church being Mrs. Mel. Morton, Misses Madge Glover, Doris McGonerty and V. Oldham, and Wesley Oldham.

and talk it over with you around four o'clock."

He went back to his work for an hour and whistled cheerfully. He whistled while he took a shower and put on the clothes made by a tailor in Bond street, London.

He parked his small car in front of Mae Alexander's decorating shop and jumped lightly over the door. When he came out, he swung the car around the corner and stopped it before the telegraph office, sent off a wire and went to fetch Dorcas.

"I feel good, today," he said to her. "Let's get 10 steaks."

"You must be hungry," she said, when he had bought enough steak for a fireman's picnic, pickles, rolls, and an armful of other groceries.

"I am," he answered cheerfully. "I'm going to finish off my dinner by eating you."

"I'd be an awfully big bite and not very sweet."

"You'd do for me," he said, and you'd think he had paid her the prettiest compliment she had ever heard.

Dorcas Hill was no lady in distress. She was plain, handsome sometimes, but she was womanly. She played tennis, golf and badminton like a man, but she had a woman's way of nursing a sick puppy, making a man feel comfortable and having another woman trust her.

She chauffeured for her father, Dr. Hill, kept house for the doctor and her mother, headed the newly-founded chapter of the Junior League, found time to serve on charity boards and enjoyed her life to its limits.

For a year now, there had been Bill Boyd and the good times they shared. And the parallel lines of their lives slowly were converging toward a happy ending.

She thought of that with quiet contentment as they stood shoulder to shoulder that night watching the harvest moon rise red and beautiful in the October sky.

Alix Carey didn't see it.

Coming home on that October night, her eyes groped through the dimness of the hall in her apartment house to the table where the mail was tossed. She saw what she had been seeking, a telegram.

Her fingers shook and something in her quaked as she tore the yellow envelope.

SHOWED YOUR LETTER TO MAE ALEXANDER STOP SHE THINKS IT'S A GREAT OPPORTUNITY FOR HER BUT IS EMBARRASSED TO OFFER YOU SMALL SALARY STOP IF YOU MEAN IT YOU CAN HAVE JOB AT EIGHTEEN A WEEK STOP THINK IT OVER STOP AFFECTIONATELY BILL (To be continued)

Percy Dymont, Albert Dymont, and Charlie Ryder.

The ladies of the community are cordially invited to attend a Shower in aid of the fancy work table—Mrs. Cecil Grant, convenor, at Mrs. Orval King's home on Thursday afternoon, April 7. A pleasant time is anticipated. So be sure and remember the day.

All the young people are asked to be present on Friday night at their regular meeting when Glenville and Keswick will present a debate.

The social evening of the Young People's Bible Class will be held on Wednesday, April 7. All the young people will be heartily welcome.

For Marmill Feeds, see F. Peel, Keswick, Advt.

Vandorf

On Wednesday afternoon Wesley Ladies' Aid will meet at the home of Mrs. John Petch.

The topic, "Women of the Bible," will be taken by Mrs. Austin Richardson, Mrs. Wm. Graham, Mrs. Geo. Mackay, Mrs. Jas. Wright, Miss A. Dike, Mrs. P. Allen.

Roll call will be answered with a Bible verse on women. Scripture will be read by Mrs. H. Dewsbury. There will be a reading by Mabel Carr. Hostesses are Mrs. Gordon Carr and Mrs. C. Moynihan.

Miss Flora McDonald of Toronto spent Easter with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. McDonald.

The four-act comedy, "Lena Rivers," will be shown at Vandorf hall on Friday evening. The play is presented by the Victoria Square Dramatic Society and sponsored by the C. G. I. T. to raise funds toward the cost of the new roof for Wesley church shed.

Miss Anne Willis is leaving on Thursday to complete her student dietitian course at Norfolk General Hospital, Simcoe.

Miss Mary Willis and Master Robert Murray of Toronto are holidaying at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Willis.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Willis and family visited the former's father, Mr. Wm. Willis of Newmarket, who was celebrating his 80th birthday.

"Yes, we spent our holiday touring in the south. It was beautiful down there."

"Motored down, eh? Well, you must have passed some glorious scenery."

"Oh, we must have. Why, we averaged well over 400 miles a day!"

6TH CON. N. G.

SUPPLY PASTOR
RELIEVES HART

Easter day was very cold and a strong wind blew from the north, making the Easter bonnets look rather chilly — and the climate also kept many of the shut-ins still at home.

A number of families through sickness and following flu are still absent from the different churches.

Visitors at the morning service at Bethel were Miss Aileen Britton of Toronto, Miss Vera Fairbairn from Stonleigh, Mrs. Elgin Barker of Oneonta, N.Y., Mrs. Sweetnam of Belleville, and others who occasionally attend. All expressed their pleasure at being present at the communion service, and enjoyed with the regular attendance the sermon by Rev. T. V. Hart, who will only be with the congregation two more Sundays. Then Mr. Butler, the stationed supply minister, will take the work.

Two families, Mr. John Morton and Mr. A. Eastwood's, have removed from this community. The loss here will be others' gain. Success is wished for both families.

The monthly meeting of the W. M. S. and the Ladies' Aid was held on Wednesday when the quilts were planned.

Mr. Bernard Huntley's family were all present at Bethel on Sunday morning.

Holt

Owing to the illness of so many and the sanatorium on Sunday, Quarterly services were not very well attended.

Everyone is waiting for the fine spring days to come. The cold spell and sand storms are not very good for those who have tapped their maple trees.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Curl and family moved on Tuesday to their home at the ranch.

Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Watts and Daisy had tea with Mr. and Mrs. Frank Watts on Monday.

Mr. Robert Hoover, who has been ill for the past five weeks, is still seriously ill.

Rev. and Mrs. B. Babcock and family motored to Harrowsmith on Monday to spend the holidays with their daughter, Mrs. Stanley Babcock.

Mr. Jas. Knott attended the anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gambrell of King City on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Curl and family had tea with Mrs. Ada Rolling on Monday evening.

Those who have been ill with flu are improving. It is hoped they may soon all be around again.

Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Brubacher are spending the Easter holidays with Mr. Brubacher's parents, Rev. and Mrs. Brubacher, of Stouffville.

"I wonder if there are any kitchen aprons in hope

Waste Of Effort On Farm Seen By Visitor

combine freedom with the rights of all. That way is co-operation. You can't be a really good farmer if you are an individual farmer pitting your powers against the powers of all other farmers.

"You must work not only for the betterment of your profession, but also for the betterment of the community at large," was Mr. McCulley's concluding word.

Introducing the special guests, and the speaker of the evening, E. K. Hampson, Hamilton, formerly of the staff of the Kemptville agricultural school, W. M. Cockburn, B.S.A., York county agricultural representative, under whose leadership the short courses were conducted, expressed thanks to the following for their co-operation throughout the courses: Sanford King, manager of the college farm, Ernest Sprague, superintendent of the York County Industrial Home, J. A. Maitland and Rudy Renzius, of the college craftshop, Reeve J. P. Jefferson of King township, and Reeve Stanley Osborne of East Gwillimbury township, who were all present, and also to Reeve Earl Toole of Whitechurch, who was absent.

Referring to Ralph White and his successor, W. M. Cockburn, Mr. Hampson said: "You are very fortunate in the quality of the agricultural representatives in this county. I suppose that in the grand old county of York, and all that, you feel yourselves entitled to the very best."

Mr. Hampson said that it had been interesting to him to learn that, in spite of all advances in agricultural methods, yields of grain were just as great 100 years ago as they are today. Barley and spring wheat have increased a little. Potatoes have decreased in yield. Even land hasn't increased in value over 100 years ago. Our progress has been in the way we live, in the conveniences in our homes, in our roads and our schools."

After reviewing what he called the "pioneer" period and the "consolidation" period, Mr.

Hampson said: "You young people are about to enter an entirely different stage. You will inherit or rent or buy improved farms with telephones and modern conveniences."

"There are conditions facing us today that present entirely new problems, that weren't here ten years ago."

"You have a number of things to be thankful for, first, your parentage in this county. This county was peopled with Anglo-Saxon stock. It has always been conservative (I am not talking politics) in its philosophy, yet cradled in this county was one of the greatest rebels, William Lyon Mackenzie."

One of Mr. Hampson's amusing asides was that his home, Hamilton, "has something like Newmarket's hockey team, a rugby team—except that it does not fade out."

"It is a very legitimate objective to make a success of your own business," Mr. Hampson declared. "There is no virtue in poverty."

"You should assume some community responsibility," he advised.

"If a man makes a success without knowledge, it is in spite of that lack of knowledge, not because of it. The men who are making crop or livestock records today are the men who ten or 15 years ago were taking these short courses to equip themselves with technical knowledge."

"The only way that progress is ever made is by doing crazy things," Mr. Hampson declared, telling his hearers not to scoff at experimenters. He told of carnations and tomatoes grown at Ottawa without soil, of a cattle breeder in the United States who is trying to combine the best qualities of various breeds of cattle, of a farmer drying his hay on long racks in order to preserve the vitamins, of hypodermic injections of food into apple trees.

"You are going to see definite changes in farm methods," he said. "There is a great deal of waste in our present methods of curing and handling hay, and of hoeing potatoes, and in other farm operations.

"We know things today that we did not know five years ago. For instance, we can tell potash deficiency by looking at a leaf, or we can tell phosphorus deficiency."

"When anyone holds up the Danish farmer, making unfavorable comparison of our farmers, I think our farmers can co-operate just as well when conditions warrant. Improvement lies in greater co-operation."

The large gathering enjoyed a piano solo from Joyce Garrett and heard toasts proposed by Charles Cook and Erna Lunney, and responded to by Helen Cole and George Beckett, officers of the boys' and girls' organizations. J. R. Baker, B.S.A., Burlington, and Miss Jessie Lambden, Tillsonburg, short course instructors, spoke briefly.

Audrey Smith's orchestra provided music for the dance which followed.

"Gosh, you're dumb. Why don't you get an encyclopedia?"

"The pedals hurt my feet."

REV. A. G. BENTLEY

Rev. A. G. Bentley, radio preacher and evangelist, widely known in Canada and the United States, will conduct special services at Newmarket Gospel Tabernacle every evening next week. A special feature on Tuesday evening will be the singing of Miss Margaret McKee, soprano soloist of the People's Church, Toronto, who is one of Canada's outstanding singers.

champion Brantford team of 1902, and played with Brantford until 1906.

Two other members of the Doyle family, Frank, who was at one time secretary of the association, and Ernest, who was on the association council, both hold life memberships in recognition of services rendered to lacrosse.

R. E. Manning is another of Newmarket's old-time famed players. He was a member of Barrie's intermediate champions.

It was no sissy game, field lacrosse. There were 12 players on a side and no subs. The field was 120 yards long and you had to be in the pink of condition to stand the pace, particularly in summer's heat.

The following accounts of the semi-final and final games of 1909 are taken from The Era files.

Sept. 10, 1909: "At Hamilton last Saturday Newmarket Talagoos won from the Hamilton Tigers by a score of 10 to 6, thus adding another victory to their long list this season. Everybody was proud of the boys and they showed it by their attendance here last Monday when the return match was played between the same teams."

"It was a dandy game. The combination play was immense and the fielding was simply remarkable for such young players."

"At one time three of the Newmarket boys were sent to the fence and would you believe it, the remainder of the team scored during their absence. The total score was 8-2 in favor of Newmarket. The juveniles have the unique record of winning every match they have played this year and are now in the finals for the championship of the province of Ontario. We sincerely hope they may win the coveted laurels. They are all our own boys and we have great reason to be proud of them."

Oct. 15, 1909: "Three special cars, carrying over 300 lacrosse players and enthusiastic admirers left here on Thursday afternoon of last week for Scarborough Beach, where the match was to be played between the Talagoos Juveniles of Newmarket and the Hespellers, for the championship of the province of Ontario. Large bands of rooters accompanied both teams and the crowd numbered about 500. That so many should be interested in the juveniles augurs well for the future of the game."

"The teams played good combination but the Hespeller boys were unable to cope with Newmarket's defence. Hespeller boys tried to score from a distance, whereas the canal town lads were always on top of the Hespeller stronghold. Hespeller's goal-keeper blocked shot after shot in a spectacular manner. The next best man on the field was probably Mulroy of Newmarket, who scored four of the goals."

"Penalties came thick and fast in the first quarter, as the little fellows from Hespeller had a tendency to lay on the hickory, but after the initial period the players steadied down."

"Play started off at a fast clip, but it was not until ten minutes had elapsed that Newmarket scored the first goal, through Joe Ganton. The first quarter ended three to two in favor of Newmarket. The half-time score was 5-3, while at the three-quarter recess Newmarket led by 7-4. The Hespellers did not score in the last quarter as they played a purely defence game, with the exception of a few minutes while Epworth was ruled off, when they made a rush for Newmarket goal but without success. In the meantime the Talagoos scored four more, making a total of 11-4."

"Newmarket—goal, Knowles; point, Epworth; cover, McInnis; first defence, Price; second defence, Hartford; centre, Anderson; second home, Mulroy; first home, Ganton; outside, Lepard; inside, B. Epworth. Field captain, E. Doyle.

"Time-keeper for Newmarket—A. C. Davis.

"Goal umpire for Newmarket—

Tom Sommerville.

"Penalties—Hespeller, 35 minutes; Newmarket, 25 minutes."

"It was soon all over town that Newmarket had won and when the special cars returned about ten o'clock a great crowd had collected in the vicinity of the depot. The town band turned out and headed a torch-light procession through the principal streets in honor of the Talagoos' success."

Now it's paid for NOT GIVEN AWAY AND STILL THEY WANT THE ERA

NORTH YORK'S FAVORITE AND HISTORIC NEWSPAPER

Most people read The Era and wise advertisers save money by concentrating their advertising in this newspaper. The Era not only has more circulation but each copy is more thoroughly and more eagerly read.

The Era is not a piece of direct mail advertising that may or may not get taken out of the mail-box or may or may not get read. It is sure of attention, BECAUSE IT IS PAID FOR.

And after it is read in the home where it is paid for, neighbors come in to read it, and other neighbors come and take it away to their homes. THE ERA IS IN DEMAND. That is why Era advertising is easily the best.

THE ERA'S CLAIMS:

In East and North Gwillimbury where most of Newmarket's shoppers come from The Era has three times the circulation of any other weekly.

In the town of Newmarket there are more Eras sold.

On Newmarket R. R. 2 in King township, in Kettleby and R. R., and on Newmarket R. R. 3 in Whitechurch township, The Era's circulation is greater than that of any other weekly.

Zephyr

The Good Friday service held at the United church was well attended. Hugh Arnold read the scripture lesson from the scene of the trial and crucifixion of Jesus. Mildred Lunney and Margaret Locke sang a duet, "The Old Rugged Cross." The sermon was based on "Who hath believed our report?" a question quite applicable today concerning Christ's sacrificial life and death.

The Easter service was of much interest in that the theme of the scripture, hymns, music and sermon was centred around, "The Power of His Resurrection." The choir sang two pieces, "Welcome Happy Easter" and "He Lives the King," which were rendered with good voice. Mrs. A. Crowle was at the organ.

"Easter is associated with springtime and in picture is represented with the bringing in of new life," Rev. Geo. Murray said. "Like Christmas, it is looked upon as a season of new fashions. Its Easter parade, no doubt, has its place in business, but not on our Christian calendar."

"Easter speaks of the bursting of the bands of death asunder, the setting free of those who are bound by the forces of sin. His Resurrection is the pledge of our resurrection. Paul was very much pronounced in what he believed."

"The Easter message is one of hope for all mankind, it is the only song of hope for the world, it is a challenge to a new life of adventure of a life hid with Christ in God."
